FOUNDER'S DAY OUR TRIBUTE

Sir William C. Macdonald

Sir William Christopher Macdonald, the founder of our beloved college, was born on February 10, 1831. He was a descendant of the Clanranald Macdonalds, whose estates of Glenaladale and Glenfinnian were located on the shores of Loch Shiel in Scotland. Having left his native Prince Edward Island at the age of 16, after a few unsuccessful ventures, Sir William eventually rose to multimillionaire status. In the words of a former Macdonald professor, "Sir William was the architect of fortune, and had the capacity for building and organizing little short of genius."

In 1865, after six years in business with his brother in the Macdonald Brothers & Co. Tobacco Manufacturing, our founder established the "W.C. Macdonald Tobacco Co." In 1883, he was elected to the board of Governors of McGill University. His great interest in education stemmed from the fact that his own formal education had been curtailed at an early age, and for years he had seen students passing his home at the corner of McTavish and Sherbrooke Sts. on their way to McGill. In 1893, the Macdonald Engineering and Physics buildings were erected and eight years later he made provisions for the installation of modern equipment and trained, paid teachers at the McGill Normal School. Sir William built the McGill Students Union in 1903. Sir William proposed that training in the fields of agriculture, household science, and education be made available. Consequently, the building of Macdonald College, on land owned by Sir William, commenced in 1905. A year later, he deeded the property to McGill, "The Royal Institute for the Advancement of Learning." By November, 1907, students were making full use of the Chemistry, Main, and Biology buildings as well as the two residences, equipped with two gymnasiums and the common dining room. The following year, the Agriculture and Poultry buildings were complete as well as the High School, which was extended in 1917. Macdonald Park, 25 acres of land worth one million dollars, was given by Sir William to McGill for the construction of the gymnasium, the stadium, and Douglas Hall in 1911. Three years later, he was elected Chairman of the Board of Governors and Chancellor of McGill University, occupying this position for four years. In 1917, Sir William Macdonald died, leaving an endowment of four million dollars to Macdonald College.

The death of our founder, however, did not halt philanthropic patronage; the work of this great man was carried on by Mr. and Mrs. Walter M. Stewart. Each Founder's Day, through their generosity, we celebrate his birthday with a half-holiday and conclude with a dinner and concert. On that day, also, there is an exhibit of mementos of Sir William's life in the library. Also due to the efforts of the Stewart family, we have our much-loved Stewart Room, the Infirmary, the new dining room and a long list of other facilities and buildings in good repair that we would have found difficult to obtain without their assistance. Their help over the years for student activities of all sorts is evidence indeed of their continuation of Sir William's intentions and ambitions. Sir William's portrait hangs in the library, while that of his successor and heir, Mr. David Stewart, hangs in the foyer of Stewart Hall.

We dedicate this issue of the Fault-He Times to our founder, Sir William Macdonald, and to his successors, the Stewarts.

BACH CHOIR TO SING

The Montreal Bach Choir, under the direction of George Little with Rosabelle and Kelsey Jones, piano-duettists, will perform at the annual Founder's Day Concert in the Assembly Hall this Saturday, at 8:00 p.m. On the program is Bach's Motet, Komm, Jesu, Komm, a series of Chansons and Madrigals, Brahms' Liebeslieder Waltzes Op. 52, Songs of Time by Kelsey Jones, and a collection of folk songs and limericks.

The Bach Choir, very popular with Montrealers, has just made a number of recordings for the Vox Recording Company which will soon be available. This excellent choir is well worth going out of your way to hear and you are urged not to miss the opportunity of listening to this marvellous group.

EDITORIALS — NEWS — COMMENTS

This week, we have decided to broach a subject which, we fear, won't be too well received and that subject is "going steady."

From our personal experience, "going steady" is a very nice end to achieve. One finds security, affection, and eventually a lack of individuality. This is fine if you can stand being one of the crowd and prefer to avoid life's problems rather than facing up to them; for the submissive type, nothing could be better than tying oneself to someone that will act as a steadying influence on their poor, little, inferior ego. Fortunately, not too many of us are really like the henpecked individual that we have just described; but we all seem to have the common failing of thinking about something, coming to a conclusion and then, if the conclusion doesn't seem to be the accepted one, shoving it to the back of our minds and conveniently forgetting it (or trying to). In the meantime, the millstone about your neck grows heavier and heavier and really begins to retard your progress. If this continues long enough, you begin to feel cheated and you cannot reconcile this feeling with the act of "going steady" because your subconscious is doing such a marvellous job of keeping your feelings to the back of your mind. The only way to solve this is to sit down and look at the situation objectively. Ask yourself seriously, "Where is this leading to?" What do I intend to do with my life? How do my future plans affect my "going steady"? If, after asking yourself these questions you come up with an answer something like "I intend to make my career in such-and-such and I don't know whether I will get married or not." Then we submit that you have absolutely no right to be "going steady". You are not only being unfair to yourself, you are being grossly unfair to your partner. Perhaps he or she has every intention of getting married and in that case you are deliberately deceiving this person.

All that we are asking you to do is pause and reflect. Look at the situation objectively and weigh all the pros and cons. We don't feel that it is asking too much of you to take a few minutes and possibly prevent the ruin of your own life and, more important, someone else's. Don't put it off; do it now. You might be surprised at the conclusions you draw.

As Editor-in-Chief of the Failt-Ye Times, I would like to tender a personal apology to the person concerned in the story entitled "History Professor Strangles Self". I consider that this article was in very bad taste and I shall do all in my power to prevent pieces of such questionable taste from appearing in this paper in the future.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Sir:

The essay by Mr. Ron Charbonneau was most aptly titled. However, India's attack on Goa is not the "Modern Tragedy" under discussion here. The tragedy implicit in Mr. Charbonneau's article is that he and other fuzzy-minded liberals like him may end up teaching history in our schools.

It has become more than mildly irritating to have current events and history interpreted by people who think politics should be motivated by moral considerations and thereby ignore the fact that throughout history nations and political leaders have in reality been motivated by considerations of "Realpolitik"! This may come as a shock to some, but national and, in some cases, personal interests are more important as motivations to political behaviour than "morality." In a disorganized world, where each State's power is mitigated only by the superior power of another State or group of States, the test of political action is its effectiveness. Whether this is good or even desirable is irrelevant. To judge events by what should be rather than by what is is the most dangerous form of wish fulfillment. Only distortion and disaster can ensue.

However, to carp with anyone's philosophical bias is pointless. Disagreement on premises can only lead to a sterile discussion. But, when a thesis is backed by evidence which is inaccurate and distorted, it is time to call a halt.

First of all, Mahatma Gandhi was an avowed revolutionist. His policy of non-violence and passive resistance was every bit as much revolutionary tactics as organized subversion and resort to arms. Him and his followers' successes were predicated upon an intimate acquaintance with Indian history. Gandhi's religious beliefs influenced his approach but had little to do with his effectiveness. Religious fanaticism is ineffectual, politically, unless it be combined with an astute and realistic appraisal of the prevailing situation. This does not necessarily have to be a fully conscious realization.

To gloss over the Kashmir dispute in a short adverbial phrase is to distort Indian history of the last 15 years. The controversy over Kashmir involves the future political composition of the subcontinent. At stake is not only a geographic entity which two countries claim, but the very validity of the existence of one of the disputing parties, Pakistan. For if the predominantly Moslem State of Kashmir were to become a permanent part of India, the ideological foundation of Pakistan as a separate Moslem nation would be destroyed and its continued independence from India be brought very much into question. Thus both parties have a great deal at stake and throughout the course of the dispute have used entirely traditional political means for settling the controversy, i.e. invective, propaganda and force. If Mr. Charbonneau wishes to destroy Mr. Nehru's reputation as the "conscience" of the world let him analyze the Kashmir dispute closely. It would then become rather obvious that Nehru is a consummate political tactician who does not let moral considerations impede his attaining his goals.

To characterize Khrushchev as having "little sympathy for either neutralism or Red China" is to confess an almost complete unfamiliarity with the man.

Now let us deal with the Goa "crisis" as presented by Mr. Charbonneau. Admittedly the Portuguese colonies were a thorn in the side of India. On political and ideological grounds, Nehru was not overly fond of having the colonies of a foreign power within his realm. Since the Portuguese obviously were not going to pull out voluntarily, the only problem was how and when to get them out and how to justify the action, for unfortunately actions must be justified in our world rather than explained.

India's action was not "careless" or "thoughtless," though it undoubtedly was "selfish." Nehru's timing of the attack was nothing short of brilliant, from both the standpoint of his domestic political problems and that of the external reaction. Using Portuguese atrocities in Angola as a blind was masterful, though fairly obvious, maneuvering. But the failure of the U.N. to censure his action was the crowning touch. For he had so shrewdly judged world wide anti-colonial sentiment that his prestige rather than declining actually increased in the eyes of those whose favour is curried by all the "have" nations, the newly emergent, underdeveloped countries now look upon Nehru with increased respect and admiration.

The Goan "tragedy" in no way detracts from India's neutralist position. For Nehru has not pursued a policy of neutralism because it is moral and good, but rather because in India's peculiar position neutralism seemed to be the only foreign policy which would give Nehru a free hand to tackle the enormous domestic problems which confronted him. In other words, neutralism for India is merely enlightened self-interest. If all of Nehru's actions were judged in the context of self-interest, rather than as right or wrong, a far less distorted view of the man and his policies would prevail. This holds true for most other nations and the men who lead them.

NORMAN BERNSTEIN

Dear Sir:

I wish to take this opportunity to express my sincere thanks to the many people who contributed towards making the Winter Carnival the success I hope it was.

The many people include not only the executive committee, who worked diligently toward a common goal, but the dozens of students behind the scenes — the program committee, the many girls who made posters, the class of '64 for the Carnival Ball, the Dips for working on Rink Night — in all totalling over one hundred active students.

Perhaps the main expression of thanks should go to the student body as a whole, for accepting the Carnival as they did. Records crowds were set at each major event, being climaxed by the capacity crowd of over five hundred at the Carnival Ball. Never before, in my two years at Macdonald College, have I seen such enthusiasm by the student body as was displayed last weekend.

I hope that, the Winter Carnival of 1962 has contributed towards the goal of creating a greater and badly needed college spirit at Macdonald. If this has been achieved, then, in my mind,

THE SPORTS SCENE

by Dave GREENSTEIN

Last Saturday during the Winter Carnival, Mac Varsity Basketball played host to R.M.C. This was easily one of the most exciting games played this year. After leading 33-23 at half time due to better shooting and ball control, Mac's quintet began to face problems. Several times during the second half, R.M.C. pulled up to within a single point of us until the final minute when they really began to move. For a while, it looked like we were finished until one of the R.M.C. players fouled our one and only, Kenny Taylor. One thing lead to another and before another minute was up, a noisy cadet bench had drawn the wrath of the referee upon themselves and were assessed of a technical foul. This breather was all our rugged five needed. With thirty seconds left and a three point lead, we held off the soldiers and went on to win 56-53. Tonight we will host C.M.R. Game time is seven o'clock. Saturday afternoon at 2:00 the varsity squad will play the Mac All-Stars.

All those who were brave enough to come out in the -28° weather on Rinknight were treated to a rough, hard-fought hockey game between our Varsity six and Bishop's University. After taking a first period 3-0 lead, we had to face two more penalty-filled frames and finally settled for a 3-3 tie. Extra support in the form of several recruits from our J.V. squad gave a much needed rest to some of our regulars. Tonight Mac plays at C.M.R.

On Saturday, Feb. 3rd, the Inter-collegiate Woodsman Competition was held on the lower campus. After the many different events had taken place, Mac's A team emerged the victors with 930.23 points. Our B group was 2nd with 898.88 and U.N.B. finished 3rd with 826.40. This gives Macdonald College the Eastern North American Winter Championship. Our two teams took a total of nine out of eleven events. Notable individual performances by snowshoer Ken Rose and cross-country skier Peter Webster contributed to our victory.

Sport Notes

In the Intra-mural Basketball league, Teachers I & III are tied for 1st place. Following a close 2nd is Agr II.

Tomorrow, there is a invitational swim meet at C.M.R. With any luck at all, we should come out on top.

Election of the officers for the Macdonald College Curling Club recently took place. Pres. is Locksley Trenholm. A house league consisting of five teams was organized and arrangements for a Bonspiel between Faculty and Students is being organized.

HERE AND THERE

By TONY BROSCOMB

If you want to get lost, and in doing so, leaving behind all (or most of) the proprieties of modern civilization, Macdonald College is NOT the place to come to. One of the greatest factors of which it is extremely difficult to orientate yourself to is the loss of time. That is to say, forget about time altogether.

However, if one is pretty well stuck in such a place as Macdonald College, where time abounds, and ticks on forever after one is dead and buried — there is not much you can do about it. Such conditions would be more bearable and less damaging psychologically speaking, if the time was the correct time EVERYWHERE. Here, with little or no extra work involved, in a list of most of the clocks on campus. There are clocks in: Laird, Stewart and Brittain Halls; the foyer clock in the Main Building, and the second floor clock in the Main Building; in the Assembly Hall, Stewart Foyer, and the Dining Hall; the Coffee Shop, and to round off the list, there are the bells which signal the end and commencement of lectures. Quite an inventory, what? Now, if all these clocks could be synchronized, people would not come toddling in late for a lecture, or cause girls in residence to be marked late when they were not — by any other clock except the one in the residences. Of course, one can always tune in to CBM, only to find that THEY are way out too — or are they?

Taking a tour of the campus Sunday afternoon, I happened to come across what appeared to be three monkeys. Upon further scrutiny, I came to the safe conclusion that they were. The main point was, of course, that these were no ordinary monkeys. First, they won only honourable mention, while the majority of folks on campus assert the fact that 'twasn't fair. However, the most interesting fact that I noticed, was that they were all facing Glenaladale, the monkeys being "See No Evil", "Speak No Evil", and "Hear No Evil". I would like to raise the question as to whether their position was a coincidence? If not, what is behind it all? Any ideas?

Where there is smoke, there's fire, and the old saying is still true today, as some people well know. The first incident that I heard mention of was in Laird Hall. Not knowing (as far as the readers of this column are concerned anyway, although a choice few may know what I'm talking about), not knowing what caused all the smoke, and fire if there was any, it must have been pretty good. Gents, just be grateful that something such as that doesn't happen to you. If the supposed cause is the same, providing that it does happen to you, there will have to be some soul-searching done, as well as other kinds of searching.

The second incident was on Tuesday evening at supper. I was hoping for a while that maybe we were going to have a decent meal for awhile, something like Bar-B-Q'd chicken. This, of course, was wishful thinking, as it turned out to be the traditional fire over by the traditional tables.

Note the following, all ye amorous ones, for 'twill affect thy cooing and courting. I have received, (in stark, unadulterated words) a tip-off concerning a Senate investigation by the sub-committee dealing with, of all things, Amorous Aims. LOSS DUE TO LACK OF PLAYERS!

Last Wednesday our senior basketball team travelled into McGill only to be defeated in a very close game. The score was 41-35 and if all the team had shown up it is very likely that we would have won, (how can we expect to win with only three forwards!?!?) At half time we were winning 20-15 but fatigue set in and McGill came out on top. Sally Sadler of former Mac fame, who is now with McGill, was their top scorer sinking 21 points and the top scorer for Mac was Pam Fellows with 13 points.

REPORT ON ARCHERY

Sparks of life have been noticed in this activity lately which is good to see. The team members that are shooting for Mac this year are: June Coleman, Jean Curtis, Linda McKeller, Mary Sagala, Bill Smith, and Doreen Vickers. The team had an invitational match last week but to protect the innocent they asked me not to print the scores. On Monday the Mount Royal Recreation Association is coming out here for a match. Good Luck cats!

DEFEAT IN THE LAST TWO MINUTES

The girl's hockey team which made it's debut last week went down to defeat in the last minutes of play. McGill opened the scoring in the first period on a freak shot which bounced the puck into the net, giving them a 1-0 lead. In the second period Karen ("Boom-Boom") McCartney scored on a break-away from center ice to tie up the game. It wasn't until the last two minute mark that McGill score and thus won 2-1. The defence wasn't quite up to par and not too much team play was evident. This, the girls will try to remedy in the next game which is a return match with McGill on Wednesday.

VICTORY DURING WINTER CARNIVAL

Two of our girls teams made a very good showing last weekend. The Volleyball team played Carleton and John Rennie and were victorious both times. Against Carleton the scores were 10-6, 2-15, 15-0. The John Rennie squad was defeated in two games 12-10, 15-0. Some of the outstanding players for Mac were Sandy Thompson, Sue Pollock, Ginny Shantz and Sely Scheffler.

The other team that came out on the top end of the score sheet was the Senior Basketball team. They played host to a squad from Carleton and defeated them neatly to the tune of 32-16. It was evident that we had the superior team at the start of the game and we held the lead throughout the four quarters.
